© Ana de Lima illustrated these marvelous oddities just as she had imagined them in her mind.

© Mia Cassany wrote about these places just as she had pictured them in her dreams.

One day, both of them sat down together for some coffee and carrot cake. They talked about maps and came up with colors and languages for an atlas that would never exist like this. Or would it?

An Atlas of Imaginary Places

Every night I dream of a magical place – a place that only exists in my mind for a brief moment. You can explore this make-believe world in the atlas. In my imagination, however, it really exists.

I fantasize and journey through a world in which the impossible is normal and the possible is jumbled up. Come with me, give me your hand and let's take a peek at a world that only becomes visible when we dream together.

Come with me to places that will surprise and inspire you.

Atchoo!

Every time someone sneezes,
the animals change their coats. If at first they were silky soft with black and white stripes, they later become wiry and spotted the next time you sneeze. You cannot remember what they looked like at first because as soon as you sneeze...
